TO the PRINTER,
IN matters of public concern, something more than negative virtue is justly expected from every member of a free state. The present critical and important seasons call upon every pen to write, and every tongue to speak, to rouse the people from the lethargy in which they have too long slept; to teach them, if not to cure, at least to palliate the distemper, and nobly to endeavour, by a manly exercise of public virtue, to free themselves and their posterity from the accumulated injuries inflicted on them by the oppressive and tyrannical laws of English parliaments.

As an Irishman, I think it is my duty to forewarn my countrymen, that they can place no confidence in the present temporizing language of their oppressors; and that they can never reasonably hope for a repeal of those laws which prescribe slavery to the lot of Ireland, unless they universally associate and resolve, and firmly adhere to their associations and resolutions, to be content to use the product and manufactures of their own country, until enabled to purchase those of Great Britain, by enjoying the benefits of a free trade. Remember, my countrymen, I tell you, they will not do you justice until it becomes their interest: persevere a while, and I promise you they will soon perceive how necessary your commerce is to their interest.—Be not amused from your purpose by fair words, nor yet by tantalizing and ignominious favours, such as that law which they lately enacted to permit the people of Ireland, as a condescending indulgence, to raise Tobacco in their fields. Time Damus et dona ferimus Be steady; and be assured of complete success.—Until their actions convince you they mean to become your sincere friends, be as much upon your guard against them as you would against a foreign and a proclaimed enemy. Again I repeat it, be steady and determined; but be cool and quiet, and let no motives whatsoever tempt you to sedition or disorder; they would become powerful arms in the hands of your adversaries. And, when I have explored the principles and intentions of the present reign, you will see, my friends, whether my advice to you is well founded or not; you will see what you are to expect from the generosity, the integrity of their Ministers; I shall do it briefly in the course of two or three letters; and I shall leave it to other writers to explore the venerable pages of our ancient history, and our INDISPENSABLE TITLE to FREEDOM and INDEPENDENCE.

I shall pass over unnoticed the kings; and will endeavour to give you a sketch of a system, which the most gracious King, never known in the present reign, a system of which

It was not long after that Majesty to the throne Ministry, by artful and well-meant to an English King, and to believe that a warm and a real indication of loyalty. The management of the King and the subtle practices of hypocritical insinuation to maintain their power, and measures, by the influence of superstition and corruption: they sacrificed the good and the public honour, to preserve a power which they acquired by a defilement of every principle of honour and of truth. The Spaniards added injuries to insults, and this ministry ignominiously submitted to both; because a foreign war would have interrupted their scheme of arbitrary government: but they have spared neither blood nor treasure, to accomplish the overthrow of Liberty throughout the British empire. If not constitutional, it is at least prudent to suppose the King is governed and directed by his ministers. To make the King absolute, was the favourite's primary object; possibly, his secret purpose was to rule the despot: for, the more absolute the King, the more absolute the Ministry must expect to become. The Minister's plan was early communicated to his Majesty: the bulk of power is strong; it founded plausibly, and was not disapproved of. The constitution was to be supported; but the ground was to be opened in the more distant parts of the empire. The people at home were judged to be too far sunk in luxury, to attend to distant danger: However it was yet too soon, to make any open attack upon the forms of the constitution at home. In Great Britain, a system of corruption was still to be adhered to: The English were amused with apprehensions of danger, from the increasing wealth and numbers of the North Americans: they were persuaded that the Minister's only object was, to strengthen the hands of Government in America: they were flattered with delusive hopes of seeing their own burdens eased, by a speedy imposition of taxes upon the growing trade of America: their natural selfishness obscured their political optics, and they lost sight of liberty, in their prospect of gain; by not opposing, they promoted measures planned for their own destruction. A system of government was planned in the cabinet for the empire, which the King was induced to hope, would exalt him above the monarchy of Europe. The liberties of America were to be first attacked: the usual revenues of Great Britain, were found inadequate to support the broad system of corruption upon which the Minister's continuance in power and favour, and the final success of his projected despotism must depend: The people of England were already taxed as far as it was thought their tempers would submit to oppression; and, by a reinforcement of policy, the countries first destined to destruction were to become instrumental to their own ruin. AMERICA and IRELAND, it seems, were decreed to be the scenes on which to hazard the first open violations of the constitution; they were to furnish subsidies, to supply the deficiencies of the British revenues. In AMERICA it was expected that moderate beginnings would either pass unnoticed, or after a little impotent complaining, be patiently submitted to; small demands, it was vainly expected, would not meet with great opposition; especially while those demands were partial, and did not bear heavy upon individuals. A British parliamentary taxation of America, was resolved upon, and, once acquiesced in, could easily be extended.

C A T O.

Charlestown, October 6.

The following Intelligence may be depended upon as authentic:

Camp before Savannah, Oct. 3, 1779. "When the French Fleet first appeared on the Coast, a Number of the Enemy's Vessels (among them two armed Sloops of 10 and 12 guns) with the remaining part of Sunbury Garrison on board, took shelter in Ogeechee River, and landed near the Plantation of Thomas Savage, Esq.—The Night before last, Col. WARTS, with his Servant, and FIVE others, summoned the commanding Officer, Capt. French of De Lancey's 1st Battalion, to surrender, suggesting to him the consequences of a storm, should he refuse—intimidated with the Threat, he capitulated—and thus FIVE Vessels, with ONE HUNDRED and FORTY ONE Prisoners, have fallen into our Hands.

The Prisoners above mentioned, are, a Captain, a Lieutenant, a Surgeon, 5 Sergeants, 16 Corporals, a Assistant, 87 Privates (mostly of De Lancey's Corps) Mosts Kirkland and Son, and 38 Sailors.

Our other advices from camp are, That notwithstanding the (unavoidably) remote situation of the Count d'Estaing's fleet from the shore of Georgia, on account of the tempestuous season; the unfavourable weather they have had; the consequent difficulties attending the landing of artillery, stores, &c. the great distance that the heavy cannon and mortars were to be dragged, thro' very bad roads; and many other obstacles to a rapid progress; all which had given time to the enemy to add greatly to the number and strength of the works they had erected for their defence in Savannah; the several approaches, and necessary batteries, for a regular attack upon them, were completed the 3d inst. so that a bomb battery was opened at midnight, and accompanied with a cannonade from the beating of the reveille on Monday, which continued at "ten o'clock," the latest date of our letters, and was supposed, would not cease till a general assault should be made, or a white flag was thrown out. Our people all in good health and high spirits; the most perfect friendship between the French and American Generals; and the last words of one of our letters conveying these good as well as heart can wish. The French, indeed, with military stores for Georgia, vessels, with people that had been banished, and were returning, have fallen into the hands of our fleet.

It is now said, that the British general officer taken on board the Experiment man of war, is the same General Oglethorpe, who has so remarkably distinguished himself, on the late expedition into Connecticut, by humanely burning the defenceless towns of Fairfield and Norwalk in that State: And that the sum of money found on board the same ship, to pay the British troops in Georgia, amounts to 30,000 guineas.

There have been lately taken, in a sloop of Mr. McGillivray's, carried into Havana, and are closely confined in the Moro-Castle, Messrs. William McGillivray, William Strothers and John McIntosh, for having been extremely indiscreet, to excite the Southern Indians to Acts of Hostilities against the Spaniards in New-Orleans, during a Time of profound Peace. And on the 4th ult. 1000 Troops were embarked, and sailed from Havana, under Convey of 3 or 4 frigates, for New Orleans.

Last Saturday three notorious Counterfeiters of Continental Money viz. Benj. Cook, John Stuen and Wm. Strother (part of a Chain of near 500, dispersed from one End of this Continent to the other, supported by the British Government, or its Generals in America) were brought to Town, under a strong guard, with their Press, some Printing Types and other Implements, and properly secured.

P. S. Letters from Camp, just received, dated Yesterday, say, the effect of Monday's Cannonade was, one of the enemy's Batteries of 9 Guns silenced and dismantled; And that, by all that Day's Fire, the French had only two Men wounded; and we, Mr. Samuel Douglas, of the Charles-Town Artillery, not dangerously. And we have a Report by Sea, that they have made themselves Masters of such a Battery, by Assault, wherein the British lost 400 men; but this wants a confirmation.

A subscriber, thro' the Channel of this Gazette, begs to hint to such Persons who have taken Negroes and other Property from the State of Georgia, owned by Traitors to their Country, and imagine the time to be theirs by Capture, that all Property of Traitors becomes forfeited to the State wherein they resided (unless the State by a Law had given such Property to Captors) and the Captors thereof entitled to no more than a Salvage, in like Manner as if Claimants individually appeared: For the State is, de Jure as much to Claimants, and the Estate forfeited is always in such Cases applied either in Aid of defraying its Expenses or in Relief of its greatly suffering well affected Citizens.
